

For the past 40 years, every President

Richard M. Nixon

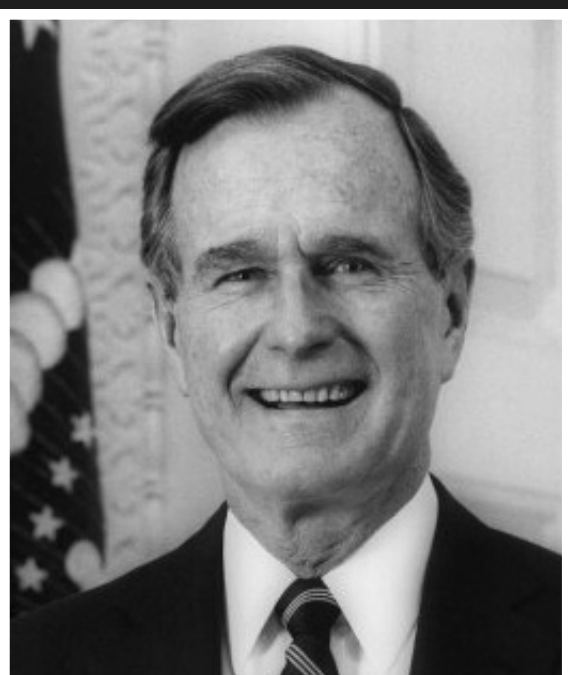

Gerald Ford

Jimmy Carter

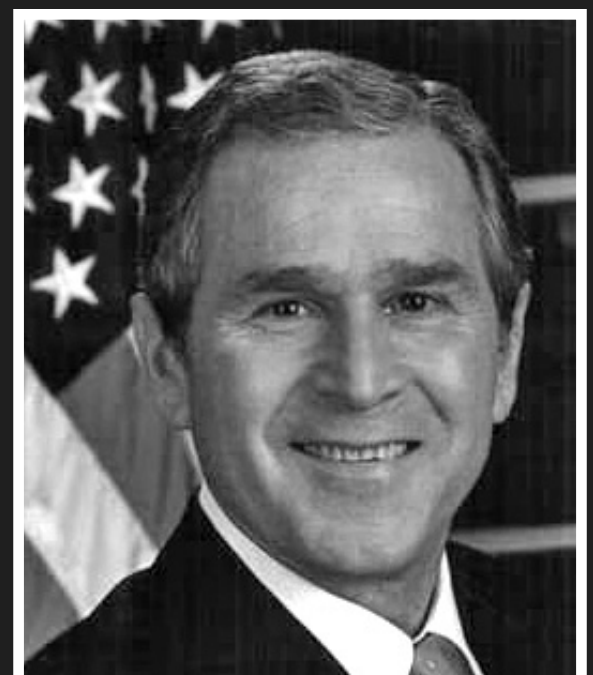

Ronald Reagan

George H.W. Bush

Bill Clinton

George W. Bush

has stood behind a treaty requiring the United States and other countries to work toward the elimination of nuclear weapons. But progress has been slow.

While the Cold War may be over, the nuclear threat is not.

The United States and Russia still have thousands of nuclear weapons poised for immediate launch.

Last year, North Korea tested a nuclear weapon — crossing the nuclear threshold.

If something isn't done, more nations will get the bomb. And eventually terrorists will, too.

Nuclear weapons make the world a more dangerous place.

That's why Henry Kissinger, George Shultz, William Perry, and Sam Nunn are calling on the United States to take the lead and work together with Russia, China, and other nations

“to turn the goal of a world without nuclear weapons into a joint enterprise.”*

Embracing a world free of nuclear weapons is key to our national security for generations to come.

It's time to pick up the pace.

It's time to move toward a world free of nuclear weapons.

It's up to our next President to make it happen.

* "A World Free of Nuclear Weapons," Wall Street Journal, January 4, 2007. By Henry Kissinger (President Nixon's Secretary of State), George Shultz (President Reagan's Secretary of State), William Perry (President Clinton's Secretary of Defense), and Sam Nunn (Former Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman).

Union of Concerned Scientists

www.ucsusa.org/nuclearweapons